There is an opening at the edge of the Black Hills called Buffalo Gap. It was a natural route for buffalo that summered in the mountains to travel onto the plains where they wintered. Lakota Indians pitched their tipis here and killed the buffalo that provided them their winter supply of meat, hides for tipis, and capes to ward off the bitter winds that swept over the plains of Dakota. When gold was discovered, Buffalo Gap became a passageway for stagecoaches and gold seekers. It grew into a rip-roaring town that rivaled Deadwood for notoriety.
