The acid etch technique for enamel bonding led to the development of revolutionary esthetic, restorative and preventive treatment modalities. Adhesive systems have created a new era in the field of dentistry with the advent of new resin technology such as SEP's simplified the procedure and comparatively less technique sensitive compared to the total etch technique. These adhesives are currently available as three-step, two-step and single-step systems depending on how the three cardinal steps of etching, priming and bonding to tooth substrates are accomplished or simplified. No-mix, single-step self-etch adhesive is also becoming available that can accomplish etching, priming and bonding simultaneously to enamel and dentine immediately after dispensing.
